Risks and Insurance

While participating under Barclay Stenner arrangements with our safari operators, certain unavoidable risks and dangers may occur, including but not limited to: accidents, illness, travel by air, automobile, or other conveyance, wildlife and the forces of nature.

You will be in isolated, rugged and wilderness terrain, often away from medical facilities, and involved in activities that are potentially dangerous such as: climbing, game spotting, horseback riding, canoeing, and nature walks.

Neither Barclay Stenner, nor our safari operators accept responsibility or liability for any injury, loss or damage suffered by any person or property from any cause whatsoever.

We do, however, make all our clients members of a medical air evacuation service, which if conditions are right, will provide an emergency air ambulance evacuation to the nearest hospital.

Neither Barclay Stenner nor its operators accepts responsibility for any delay prior to or during the course of our safaris brought about by strikes, weather conditions or any other circumstances beyond our control. If Barclay Stenner judges any destination to be unsafe it will offer to reschedule, relocate, or refund your trip. If field conditions should not be optimum due to weather conditions, operators reserve the right to change the itinerary at any time.

All individuals come on safari at their own risk and must therefore provide their own travel, health and accident insurance coverage during the safari. In addition, we strongly advise guests to take out cancellation insurance to cover any possibilities of personal health or family matters that would result in the inability to travel.
